This is the practice of chewing a small stick of wood such as eucalyptus, cattley guava or “pie zanblon” (jambul), and afterwards spitting it out. Physical hygiene is also maintained made by clearing one’s throat in a manner that is known as “tir flem” (removing phlegm). It consists of putting one’s hand in one’s mouth in a way to extract the phlegm by coughing and then spitting. A tool called “grat lalang” (tongue scratcher) or “rakl gorz” (throat scraper) can also be used. This is traditionally made with a stick of wood from a tree such as mango tree, cattley guava tree or bamboo. Modern versions are mainly made from metal. The toothpick is traditionally used by Sino-Mauritians. Mauritians, Rodriguans, Agalegeans and Chagossians traditionally took a bath by using water fetched from a public tap or fountain, or fetched from a river. In the past, the soap used to wash the body was the same as the one used for laundry. It was called “savon gosaz”. A classic white soap (“savon blan”) was also used. A bath prepared with infused leaves of “neem” (Azadirachta indica) was also popular. Traditional tools used to scrub the body include a coconut brush, polished stones, or corncobs. Face cleaning was traditionally done by applying crushed “safran” powder (curcuma) and lemon juice to clean and purify. There are also ‘Frott ledò avek ross’, ‘frott lipie lor ross’ Further research needed |                                                        |

Sometimes it was rinsed with vinegar. According to some people, Hair cannot be washed spontaneously, i.e. it cannot be washed on Saturdays, nor when women have their periods, or just after giving birth. Women applied coconut oil or cooking oil called “lwil kari” (curry oil) on their hair after washing. Some did this after each bath and others only on the occasion of festivals. Coconut oil can also be mixed with “dal” (Cajanus Indicus). Hair was dried with a perfumed vapor produced by the “reso” (coal stove) where charcoal was burnt with fragrant plants. Hairstyles are closely associated to the gender, age and social status of a person. Many Indo-Mauritian women traditionally kept long hair. This is a fashion statement and a sign of femininity. It is believed girls who have short hair will not find a husband and some would never cut their hair after their first period since this was a vital symbol of entrance to womanhood. Traditionally, girls didn’t wear their hair down; rather, importance was attached to tying hair. Some typical hairstyles women wore were: “lake brinzel” (two braids on both sides of the face lifted and attached to the head), “balans” (two braids on both sides of the face attached together, crossing at the back of the head), and “lake seval” (tail), a braided plait). These hairstyles were fixed with collared ornaments fixed on both side of the face, mainly for special occasions such as festivals and weddings. Some women used curlers and wore a scarf on their head, as this was considered as a beautiful and stylish hairstyle. Applying of coconut oil Applying mixture of coconut oil and ‘deluil bwar’ |                                             |

Those who did so used to make cosmetics with flour. Chinese women used to try to make their skin appear paler through the use of rice flour. Rice flour and other bird-dropping derived face powders have been used for centuries, along with other makeup accessories that slowly found their way to Sino-Mauritians. Oil- blotted papers and facial scrubs made from finely ground red beans are other innovations that keep the skin healthy. Mauritian women of Indian origin wore a “tika” (or “kumkum”) on their forehead (a red dot for married women and a black one for widows). These were traditionally made with curcuma powder (“safran”); in the modern day women sometimes use tika in the sticker form. Married women also wear “sindour”, a line drawn on the scalp with vermilion powder. During weddings, a ceremony called “Hardi” is takes placea day before the actual wedding ceremony. On this day, Turmeric (hardi), rosewater, and sandalwood are mixed into a paste and are applied on both the bride and groom by their female relatives and friends. Hardi (turmeric) originates from ginger root. When dried and ground, it transforms into a deep yellow powder. The powder is used as a spice and as food colouring. Hardi is also known to have medicinal properties and can be used as an anti-septic for cuts and bruises. Mauritians of Indian origin also wore “godna”, a tattoo made on the forehead acted like an identity marker. This was done when they were very young. “Godna” is considered the only ornament that accompanies a person after death. “Mehendi” is applied amongst Indo-Mauritians on hands and feet for weddings and special occasions. It is done by taking leaves of the henna tree (“pie mehendi”) and crushing them on the rock. These trees have almost totally disappeared in Mauritius, and nowadays some commercial form is used. |                                           |

These categories are the “rafresi” (refreshing plants), depurative, digestive, bracing, sedative, and therapeutic plants. These treatments are administered to get back the sick body to a healthy state, well balanced. Mode of administration Medicinal plants are prepared differently according to the form in which they are administered. They are traditionally prepared to make “latizann” (infusion or decoction); bath, “kataplazm” (poultice) or these can also be rubbed or only put under the pillow in the bed. Different parts of the plants can be used, including leaves, fruits, flowers, roots, rhizome, seeds, and bark. Healer using medicinal plants People who use to prepare treatments with medicinal plants can be anybody having some knowledge, generally transmitted orally through generations. However, it is a domain of knowledge often transmitted through the female side of the family as they are the ones who prepare the treatment; however, men can also have some knowledge on medicinal plants as those were generally the ones who used to go in the woods to pluck the plants for their wife or mother. In this way, most Mauritians have some basic knowledge in traditional medicinal plants, such as boiling some leaves of “yapana” (Ayapana triplinervis) for digestion or “bom du Pérou” (Plactranthus madagascariensis) to cure cough and expel phlegm. On the other side there are also some people who are considered to be specialists in making of “latizann” (plant treatments) and bearers of this traditional knowledge. Those healers are sometime considered to have a “don” (gift) which they received from a deity or another Invisible being, which is giving them special status and specific powers allowing them to use the power and the spirit contained in the plant. Generally, for basic diseases people use to prepare themselves some “latizann” with plants they grow and pluck in their garden. However, for serious diseases or less basics ones, people use to consult the specialists who have the knowledge and skills, and furthermore to keep at home some plants they use to pluck in the woods and keep them for their patients. Those who are generally offering their services and knowledge freely, the patient will not have to pay nor say “thank you”. He can only offer a small gift after his healing such as a handkerchief. There are also some small medicinal plants shops in the Mauritian markets (Port Louis Central Market, Rose Hill Market) kept by second or third generation of healers who learned |                                                                   |

It depends of the plant used and disease to be treated; some are particularly associated to sacred domain. Long ago, in Rodrigues, people used traditional medicine to cure themselves. Elderly people were knowledgeable in traditional medicines but with the growth of westernization, traditional medicines are referred to a secondary place. However, there are still people who prefer traditional medicine because it is natural medicine. It included the following: Healing with medical plants: people use herbal medicine to treat common illnesses such as diarrhea and vomiting. They local flora provided them with all the medicinal plants that they needed. Examples: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>— People used dried tomato leaves to cure diarrhea.</li> <li>— Pass alum or salt over a person to avert an evil spirit and eye. People had shower with alum or salt as well.</li> </ul> Drink herbal infusions to ward off evil eye. Healing with magical acts such as the use of rituals, pas (passes) and mark (marks): Besides rituals of protection, there were also rituals that were practised to cure people. Examples: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>— They cut the neck of chicken to pass over people head and coconut as well for prayers.</li> <li>— Met disel dan latet aswar pou tir move zer (put salt in the head at night to avert evil spirit). LITERAL TRANSLATION</li> <li>— When people had tooth ache, they marked the rotten tooth with a rusted nail.</li> <li>— Lakord ledan (dental rope) LITERAL TRANSLATION: it was like a tabiz that people used when children were teething so that the teeth grew up properly. They also used a metal to protect babies from convulsions when teething.</li> </ul> Healing with prayers: The healer said prayers to heal people. The latter gave candles to the healer to say prayers for deliverance and to recover health. The healer wrote the name of the person on a piece of paper, lit the candles and the whole family participated in the prayers. Some parents also voue enn zenfan (vowed their children) LITERAL TRANSLATION to Saints when they were ill. They usually made the promise not to cut their children's hair until their first communion. There were spiritual songs as well that they sang for protection, to cure from illnesses and when people had problems and faced difficulties. These songs and prayers were old ones that were not said during mass. Healing with body manipulations such as krake (cracking) LITERAL TRANSLATION, drese (set up) LITERAL TRANSLATION, frote (rubbing). Example: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>— When people had a sprained wrist and ankle, healers used to rub or crack the injured bodypart or made passes to restore the damaged ankle and wrist.</li> </ul> In Chagos island, people ised to make use of medicinal plants for healing. San darut is foliage found on the island that is used for making infusion to cure inflammation. Three leaves are boiled to refresh oneself, for example, urinary inflammation. Sitronel (Citronella): a handful of citronella is boiled (sometimes ginger is added) with 4-5 cups of water until the water becomes dark yellow. This decoction should be drunk hot or |

Those treatments imply some knowledge and skills, but not every healers of that kind consider themselves to have a gift. This knowledge is generally transmitted in the family through generations. These treatments will remove displaced members or organs in its former place. It can cure sickness such as “foulir”, “vant deranze”, “douler”. These skills are highly linked to the local conception of the body. |                  |

Those are practiced amongst every ethno-cultural group. However some of these practices are not included in this chapter but in the domain of rites of passage as they also participate to birth rituals. Those are knowledge traditionally transmitted from mother to daughter. In the past those “fam saz” (midwives) also known as “dai” amongst Bhojpuri speaking people, were also delivering at people’s place. Actually they only follow the pregnancy at home and follow the mother and baby during 10 to 12 days after delivery to give first treatments. This tradition is still very present and knowledge transmitted while it is changing according to easy access to modern medicine and hospitals. Midwives also used to prepare brewed drinks, herbs and even prepare hot baths to soothe the mother’s sufferings before the birth. They would also touch the belly before delivery to know the position of the baby and eventually turn him by some manipulations if he wasn’t in a good position for the delivery. After birth delivery, the mother is considered to be very weak; she has to rest and can’t clean the house. The midwife will take care of the mother by rubbing the mother’s body with coconut oil and mustard oil. Particularly her feet, hands, waist and lower abdomen. In the abdomen the midwife will look for residuals pieces of the placenta, or clots, that she will rub and push down to remove them. The midwife will heat the waist, the back and the abdomen of the mother by using hot piece of fabrics she has heated on an oven. The midwife will also heat the mother’s crotch as it is believed “freser” (cold) or “movezer” (evil spirit) can come into the mother’s body by this opening which was recently opened and still not closed. To heat the crotch they generally use a “reso” (coal stove) or vapour of camphor leaves boiled and placed under the mother’s legs apart who is standing. Then the uterus (“lakaz baba”) which is considered to have fall down with delivery has to be put back at its place. The belly is rubbed and a piece of cloth and is tied tightly around the waist of the mother. This tissue is kept several days to anchor the uterus. Furthermore, the midwife will wash the mother during these 12 days with hot water mixed up with 3 eucalyptus leaves. However the mother will not be allowed to wash her hairs during the next 40 days to avoid getting a cold (“freser”). The midwife also advises and assists the mother in breastfeeding and for the alimentation. The mother will drink milk mixed with “safran” powder (curcuma) and “masala” spices to invigorate her. Moreover, she will have to eat meal prepared with “masala” spices during two or three days, as well as “bomli” (bombay duck) prepared with “masala” and lentils to promote the lacto genesis. Amongst Mauritians of Chinese origin the mother receive a meal known as “coq au vin” (chicken cooked with wine) and a Chinese tea to purify her body, remove all the impurities and strength her. Then Mauritians of Chinese origin use to wrap the womb in bandages for it become flat. She will not be able to wash her hairs during 40 days, nor to go out of the house. |                |

|     | The newborn is also receiving care from the midwife. She will bath the newborn, do him massages with oil, break the « file lalang » which is known to be a wire under the tong that have to be break otherwise the baby will never be able to speak. She will also blow on the sex of the baby to withdraw the “file lekor” (a wire on the sex). She can ask the parents to keep the remains of the dried umbilical cord in a box until it is totally decomposed, or to prepare an infusion to heal some newborn diseases. The newborn would not be able to go out from the house during the next following 40 days, nor stay alone in a room. |                                                                                                                                                               |

| 1.5 | Short description In the past, before the arrival of fridges, the conservation of foodstuffs was of major importance. Local processes were developed on the basis of the traditional knowledge of migrants; these were adapted to the local climate conditions. Some of these processes are: In Rodrigues, people dry, smoke (“boukane”), salt, and ferment in a vase (“dan potis”) aliments such as meat and fish. To dry fruits or vegetables or even algae. To “met konfi” (to pickle) fruits or vegetables. These are placed in vinegar or in water containing vinegar, salt and sugar. To prepare “vinnday” (a dish which is first fried and then soaked in oil and spices) such as fish “vinnday”. To prepare “zasar” or “koutcha” of fruits or vegetables: the fruit or vegetable is salted – some needs to be dried up under sun rays for a day or more. This is then mixed with spices (mustard, garlic, turmeric, fenugreek, dry chilli) and the mixture is covered with oil to conserve it. To prepare “lazle” (jam). Zasar or Koutcha: These are forms of pickled fruits or vegetables: the fruit or vegetable is salted – some need to be dried up under sun rays during one day or more. It is then mixed with spices (mustard, garlic, turmeric, fenugreek, dry chilli) and the mixture is covered by oil to conserve it well. Some popular “zasar” are prepared with mangos, mix vegetables, local olives (Elaeocarpus floribundus) or “bilinbi” (Colea pedunculata) among others. The preparation of the “koutcha” is quite similar to that of “zasar”; however, it is prepared only with grated green mangos as fruit. |                                                                  |

They used to blow on the embers with a metal pipe called “poukni”. Some Mauritians still cook in this manner for economic reasons, or because they prefer the particular taste of aliments cooked on wood fire. Some people prepare only specific meals in this way on special occasions. People in the Repeublic of Mauritius have different ways and techniques of cooking. Examples of rice-based food: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>– Steamed rice is often eaten with a sauce-based dish; however, other ingredients can be added to the rice to form a particular dish on its own. Below are some examples:</li> <li>– Bhagaaral bhaat: A type of Indian fried rice made with left over rice.</li> <li>– Bol renverse (“upside down bowl”). This is a dish made of steamed rice with “chop suey” (a dish consisting of meat stir-fried with vegetables with Chinese sauces such as oyster sauce). The recipe looks Chinese, but it is actually a typical Mauritian dish and a local creation.</li> <li>– Briyani: This is a spicy rice dish which is very common among Mauritians. It is usually served on festive occasions. The origin of Briyani can be located in the Middle East, but it was introduced in Mauritius by the Indian immigrants. However, the recipe and taste was so much adapted to the Mauritian context that nowhere in the world can the Mauritian Briyani be found!</li> <li>– Dilo Kanz/ Maar: The boiling water used to cook rice in is called “Dilo Kanz”. Chilli, onion and salt can be added to the water and then drank separately. This was supposed to be a consistent type of food, and poor people used to consume this often in the past. This water can also be used to feed cattle. A special dish called the “bouyon bred” (a leafy soup) can also be made using this water. The “bouyon” is said to be tastier in this way, compared to preparing it with ordinary water.</li> <li>– Diri frir/ Fried rice: This consists of steamed rice stir-fried with other ingredients such as meat, vegetables, eggs and soy sauce. “Pwason sale” (salted fish) is also sometimes added instead of meat, and this dish is termed “diri frir pwason sale”).</li> <li>– Diri may: Rice cooked with corn.</li> <li>– Diri rousi: this consists of steamed rice stir-fried with spices such as onions and garlic.</li> <li>– Kanji: this is a type of rice prepared with yoghurt, salt and onion sprouts, mostly prepared during special occasions.</li> <li>– Khichiri: Rice cooked in turmeric paste and with pulses.</li> <li>– Mounfan: this is a kind of « Briyani » with fewer spices and with a more Chinese influence. It is often termed “Chinese briyani”.</li> </ul> |                                                                   |

Dal puri is flour-based dough stuffed with “dal” (Cajanus Indicus), rolled and then heated on a hot plate. It is mostly served with bean curry or “rougay” or any kind of vegetable or curry. It actually originated from the northern region of India and was introduced in Mauritius by the Indian Indentured labourers. Initially, it was only an occasional and festive food but gradually it became the most popular Mauritian fast food. It has been adapted be rapidly produced and today it is more popular in Mauritius than it is in its place of origin.</li> <li>- Farata/ roti: this is a type of flatbread. In Mauritius, the square-shaped “farata” is very common. The dough is made out of flour and water. It is then flattened and turned over three or four times and given a shape; it is “belo” (flattened) again with a “belna” (rolling pin). A little oil is applied to each layer. It is then folded in a three- cornered shape and flattened again. Then it is put on a “tawa” (large metal plate on which unleavened flatbread is cooked) and flipped a few times so that it is cooked evenly. Once it turns a golden brown colour, it is flipped over and oil is applied over the surface, and then turned again to apply more oil. The “farata” is ready when it is sparsely covered with dark spots; it is then removed from the “tawa”. It is crushed to remove the steam within and folded neatly in four to be kept in an air-tight container.</li> <li>- Goulawni: this is a sweet kind of pancake similar to “dal puri”</li> <li>- Litthi: this is a stuffed flatbread. It consists of inserting the cooked “gato pima” in a “masala” sauce, and vegetables such as eggplant can be added as well. “Karhi barhi” is a primordial curry which is served in Hindu weddings.</li> <li>– Kari (curry): this is a term employed to denote a wide variety of dishes originating in India, Pakistan, Bangladesh or other Southern and South-eastern Asian countries. Curry is the mixture of a combination of spices, herbs and usually includes fresh or dried chilli. In Mauritius, “lapoud kari”, which is a commercial curry powder made of a mixture of spices, is frequently used. The spices used in the “kari” are namely clove, pepper, cinnamon, cardamom and cumin among others. Mauritians often add potatoes to their curry. “Kari” is often eaten with “farata”. It may contain meat, poultry, fish, shrimp, pork, chicken, deer, and tendrec, monkey, beef or sheep intestines and may also be vegetarian cooked with all type of vegetables or even fruits such as raw banana or jackfruit. Chicken curry is considered a special meal for special occasions or as ‘Sunday meal’. For Hindu weddings, seven “kari” are traditionally prepared and served to the guests.</li> <li>– Ladob (stew): a sauce quite similar to “rougay” apart from the fact that it is spicier and fewer tomatoes are used. It can be prepared with meat, chicken or fish.</li> <li>– Rougay: The “rougay” is another Mauritian speciality, and a staple dish for many Mauritian families. It is made of tomatoes cooked with onions. The ingredients used in the preparation of the “rougay” are basically oil, onions, garlic, ginger, thyme, parsley, tomatoes, chilli, salt and pepper. It can be vegetarian or prepared with fish, prawns, beef, chicken, sausages, tuna, eggs, etc. Mauritians enjoy rougay mixed with salted or dry fish or dry octopus. Another preferred type of “rougay” is the “rougay sevre” (shrimp), which is sometimes served inside a “farata”. There is also pistachio, fish and corned beef “rougay”. The corned beef “rougay” was a meal known to be consumed during cyclonic weather, but is now also appreciated as an everyday meal.</li> <li>– Salmi : The “salmi” is a spiced dish, with either of the following: meat, chicken, bat, pig, pork. |  | (see also wheat flour section). <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>- Dal puri: It is one of the most popular traditional fast food of Mauritius. It is a flour doe stuffed with “dal” (Cajanus Indicus), rolled and then heated on a hot plate. It is mostly served with beans curry or “rougay” or any kinds of vegetables or curries. It actually originated from the northern region of India and was brought by the Indian Indentured labourers. Initially it was only an occasional and festive food but gradually it became the most popular Mauritian fast food. It has been adapted to a rapid Mauritian production and today it is more popular than its place of origin (see also wheat flour section).</li> <li>- Halim: It is a popular dish/ a kind of spicy soup made from pounded wheat and mutton (or beef) made into a thick paste usually made from lentils. It is sold all over and Mauritians consume it. It has also been adapted to the vegetarian dish.</li> <li>- Katkat: Fried “dal”with spices.</li> <li>- Moulouktani: This is a chicken soup that has now become a local speciality. It is often cooked with onions, clove, parsley, curry leaves, thyme, coconut water, salt and pepper.</li> <li>- Poli: Boiled chickpea (“gram bouy”) (a variety of “dal”) crushed in “jata”previously.</li> <li>- Rason: A spicy lentil soup usually served before dinner. It contains coriander, aromatic curry leaves, and garlic and tamarind juice</li> </ul> Mauritians often eat their dishes with accompaniment as spicy sauce. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>- Lasos lay (garlic sauce): Mauritians have a special sauce to accompany several dishes: the garlic sauce. This sauce is usually used with fried rice, fried noodles and other ‘snacks’. The ingredients used to make this sauce are vinegar, salt, sugar and garlic.</li> <li>- Pima frir: Fried chilli is often used to eat with rice. This consists in cooking the chilli with onions and oil. The “pima kari” is often used for this preparation.</li> <li>- Satini (chutney): People use to prepare traditional chutney as accompanies to dishes. For example, Mauritians make chutney with raw tomatoes, coconut, coriander, grilled tomatoes, potatoes, “pipangay” (silk squash), grilled tomatoes, mango, etc. Chutney can also be made with: pineapple, banana, eggplant, grilled peanuts, octopus, and salted fish among others.</li> <li>- Sauce enragée: This is a mayonnaise recipe with chilli. This sauce can be served like a mayonnaise but only to those who enjoy eating chilli. |  | Mauritians, especially children, use to buy it after school or for tea time. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>- Mawa Samoosa: The Mawa Samoossa is another example of the Divali cakes. It is made of the fried dough and its filling. To make the dough, flours should be mixed with oil and a little lukewarm milk is added little by little in order to form soft and pliable dough. The dough is set aside. Or the filling, warm milk and ghee are added as well as milk powder. It should be mixed until a uniform mixture is obtained. It is covered to obtain a powdery and coarse mixture at the end. Once it is removed from heat, cardamom powder and sugar is mixed to it. Coconut and semolina can be added as well. Small portions of this dough are rolled out and cut out in small circles. Then the filling is put in the centre of each circle and folds it into a semi circle. The edges are sealed properly so that it doesn't open up during frying.</li> <li>- Nankhatai: Nankhatai is a like a cookie from India which is made from flour, sugar, butter and nuts or almonds. Sugar and ghee is blended after which flour and almonds are added to the mixture. The dough is well and it is too stiff, a few drops of milk can be added. The dough is rolled into small balls and slightly flattened. They are then placed on a greased tray and can be served with tea. Nankhatai is another famous Divali cake.</li> <li>- Napolitain: Often eaten at tea time, this cake made of flour, sugar, jam and icing sugar is loved by children. The "napolitain" cake is often offered at the christening and christmation of a child.</li> <li>- Nougat: It is a sweetened candy with either peanuts or almond seeds.</li> <li>- Pâtes de fruits: Fruit paste prepared with sugar. Guava and mango are the mostly used fruits for this preparation. "Pâtes de fruits" has now become a recurrent gift to foreigners.</li> <li>- Piaw: It is a type of fried sweet doughnut.</li> <li>- Poudinn dipin:(bread pudding): This recipe is often used with stale bread. The preparation is sometimes made by the Mauritian woman, with her children. The "poudinn dipin" is served at tea time or for breakfast.</li> <li>- Poudinn may: A pudding prepared with grinded maize.</li> <li>- Poudinn vermisel: A pudding prepared with vermicelli.</li> <li>- Poutou: The pancakes demand a hard work. To start, one has to sort the rice before being reduced to powder. Then, it must be sifted and put to dry. The next day, one must add the vanilla, sugar and coconut, before cooking with the steam in the "poutou kola".</li> <li>- Puwa: This cake made of flour, powder milk is fried. It is traditionally prepared for Holi festival.</li> <li>- Rasgoolah: Milk powder, flour and baking soda are mixed and butter is rubbed into the mixture until grainy and coarse. Boiled liquid milk is added as well as some water. The dough is then divided into portions and roll into smooth balls. They should not have cracks else they will break while frying. After turning brown in the hot oil, "rasgoolah" should be soaked in sugar syrup for some 10 minutes.</li> <li>- Rasmalai: Rasmalai are sweetened, flattened or round balls soft cakes which are soaked in milk cream and serves most of the time as chilled desserts. Eggs are mixed together with milk powder to form a thick, sticky dough-like mass. Then they are divided into small sized balls and flatten gently on palms. They are laid on a tray. On the other hand, milk should be boiled and once it starts to boil the small sized balls should be added gently into the milk. They will normally expand a bit when they start cooking. After about some 10 minutes of cooking, crushed cardamom can be added and Rasmalai are soft when eaten.</li> <li>- Rot: Small sized cakes made principally out of flour, sugar, milk and some cardamom. They are served only in prayers. Sugar, milk and the flour are mixed together and deep fried. They are served together with 'Parsadi' or semolina.</li> <li>- Sagoo: Sagoo is usually served as a chilled desert but can also be eaten warm. | 1.5 | Short description Long ago, people used to play traditional games for leisure and entertainment. Examples <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>– Guli Danda/Guli Danta: this game has some traits of cricket but it requires a minimum of two players. The game is played with a “gilli” and a “danda”, both of which are wooden sticks. The first one is longer than the second one. The objective of the game is to use the “danda” to strike the “gilli”. For this purpose, a circle is drawn in the ground and the “gilli” is inserted into the hole. The “danda” is then swung downward onto the end of the “gilli”, causing the “gilli” to jump upward. The striker then strikes the “gilli” outward, away from him and the opponent has to catch it. If the opponent fails to catch it then he will be punished by either making him dance or sing a tongue twister or run on one leg. If the opponent catches the “gilli” then he will be the one who will strike the “gilli”. This game is originated from India. This game consists of two sticks of different length: small and big stick. The small one has both edges cut and the big one has only one edge cut. The small stick is placed on a rock then with the help of the longer stick; the small one is hit making it to go a little bit higher. It is hit again but with much force in order to push it to further some meters.</li> <li>– Sapseeway/Sapsiway: The sapseeway game consists of a certain number of elastic bands or inner tube of a bicycle cut in band and well attached together, which the player tries to juggle with one leg. The one who makes the maximum number of juggling at one go is the winner. Many people in Mauritius consider this game to be of Chinese origin. In this game, a bundle of rubbers obtained from a bicycle’s wheel is cut in a circled shape attached with an elastic band is used. The player plays with the bundle of rubbers with the ankle without letting it to touch the ground. Sometimes children used some herbs attached with a string or metal instead of rubber to manufacture the toy.</li> <li>– Slingshot: A slingshot is a small hand-powered projectile weapon. The forked Y-shaped frame has two rubber strips attached to the uprights, leading back to a leather sheath for holding the projectile. It is normally fired by holding the frame in the non-dominant hand, extended at arm’s length. The sheath is then gripped between thumb and forefinger of the dominant hand, pulled back to near the cheek, aimed and the pocket released to fire the projectile toward the target. Home-made slingshots were popular children's toys for much of the 20th century because the low projectile velocity was generally considered to be safe. A slingshot can cause serious bodily harm and is not a recommended game. The slingshot was normally made of guavas’ branches that had a y-shape because it was more resisting and long-lasting.</li> <li>– Zwe fles/ fleset (darts): This game is mostly known as “Amerikin” by Mauritians. This game was mainly played by boys who tried to imitate Robin Hood. “Fles” mean arc and</li> </ul> |                                           |

Western cowboy films influenced boys' games at that time. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>- Zwe kaskot / boul kaskot: A child throws the ball to the opposite player and runs away in a specific direction. The opposite team makes all efforts to hit the back of the opponent. If he misses then the one who threw the ball will replace the one who tried to hit the back. This game can be played by two players or teams. A line is drawn on the ground. Each player in both groups throw ball made of cloth, hard plastic ball, or even tennis ball to hit the opponents' group of players. If one player is being hit, he is eliminated from the game.</li> <li>- Zwe lamarel: The game consists of moving on one foot or both foot by pushing a quits along a drawn grid. The grid may be in a rectangular form or other forms. The one who succeeds in doing it without touching the lines of the grid is the winner. This game is known as Hopscotch in English. The origin of this game is mysterious. Many people think that this game is originated from Egypt or Greek Civilisation. However in Chinese scriptures, there do have mention of this game. Squares numbered one to nine is drawn on the ground with the help of a rock or chalk or even paint. A pebble is thrown, then a child start to jump on one foot till the last number which is usually the number 9 then come back from where he or she started. This game is mostly played by girls.</li> <li>- Zwe lasas zozo / Zwe lasas kamaleon (Birds hunting and chameleon hunting). It used to be a very famous game for children. However, this activity tends to disappear and is considered cruel practice for animals. A "slingshot" (a small hand-powered projectile weapon), or natural glue were used to catch birds. Lasas zozo was also an activity associated to the watching of crops.</li> <li>- Zwe pistole banbou: A piece of bamboo is used. Bullets are made of paper or grains are inserted in the hollow bamboo. With a single blow of the mouth, the bullet is ejected from the piece of bamboo. The aim of this game was to hunt birds.</li> <li>- Zwe Tinaor gothi: "Gothi" or "tina" game was originated from Europe whereby bones of sheep were used. This game consist of throwing several pebbles or small ball made from carton in the air then catch the maximum of pebbles or ball before touching the soil.</li> <li>- Zwe Toupi/ toupi malgas(top). There were three kinds of top which were played: 'toupi malgas', 'toupi naye' and 'toupi lagrin leksi'. The 'toupi malgas' was made from a piece of wood. With the help of a whip made of a stick and rope, the top was spin. A nail was inserted at the bottom of the top for the 'toupi naye' and finally, the last type of top was made from a litchi seed which was cut into two pieces vertically whereby a match stick was inserted. It is believed to be originated from Holland. However, the way that tops were created originated from Madagascar as its name suggest and locally. For example, the top known as 'toupi lagrin leksi' has been created in Mauritius. Some years back, a Japanese based cartoon serial was broadcasted by the Mauritius Broadcasting Co-operation named 'Beyblade'. Many children in Mauritius was influenced by this cartoon and bought tops of different size and colours to play this game. The game Beyblade is originated from Japan. The player turns the spinning top with a whip. One must able to turn the spinning top longer, in a precise space. Some children also make small "toupi" with litchi seeds or 'longann' seeds just for fun. The seeds were cut half and a small stick was placed on it- the stick was preferably a match stick. But this did not require a whip as it was twisted by hand itself.</li> </ul> |

|  | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>- Zwe yoyo: This game is believed to be of Chinese origin. The toy is made of wood, metal, or even plastic having a disc shaped. A long string is attached from the centre. With the help of the index finger, the player make the yo-yo to go from up to down.</li> <li>- Zwe kolemayar/ kolimayar/ kolinmayar: All you will need is a blindfold and enough space for some excitable children. Choose one child to be "it", and blindfold him or her. Turn her round a few times to disorientate her a little, while the other children group themselves around her. Then let her try to tag one of the other children, who will then become "it". In this game a piece of cloth is put on one's eyes. The latter has to catch his or her friends who are near him. The one, who is caught, has to wear the piece of cloth and find his or her other friends.</li> <li>- Zwe kouk Kasiet/Kouk Mare nwar: This game is called hiding and seeks. Formerly, people would spend whole day playing this game. In this game a number of players conceal themselves in the environment, to be found by one or more seekers who close their eyes generally counting to a certain number giving time to the others to hide them. This game had a special place among children on Friday nights during Indian weddings. It is the famous hide and seeks game whereby several children hide and one among them had to look for the others.</li> <li>- Zwe lamok delivre/ lamok kapitenn (liberating tin): it is a variation of hide-seek game whereby a tin is filled with small rocks and the opening is sealed. The tin is thrown far away and the seeker has to go and fetch the tin. Meanwhile, the children go to hide themselves and the remaining one who is not caught will take the tin and liberate his caught friends. It is one of the modified versions of the classical hide and seeks game which is played by both boys and girls. A tin can filled of pebbles and closed is placed in a circle which has been drawn on the ground. Children go to hide. The players which are caught become prisoners. The last player which has not yet been found should ring the time in order to liberate his friend which is caught. This game has been created locally by children. This game is no longer played in Mauritius.</li> <li>- Zwe polis voler: it is one of the forms of chasing game. Several children play this game where some played the role of the police whereas others played the role of the thieves. Gun toy is used in this game. Long times ago, branches of trees were cut in form of guns.</li> <li>- Zwe pot: One player is chosen by drawing lots. The other players sit in a form of a circle. The player leaves an object secretly behind anyone who is sitting and tries to complete the round of the circle without being noticed. If the other player is aware of the object then he/she runs after the one who placed it to prevent him/her from completing the round by touching him/her. If the latter succeeds in terminating the round of the circle, then the other player becomes 'pot'.</li> <li>- Fer larond: Ring-Around-The-Rosie is one of those games that can bring someone back to their childhood. The rules are simple to learn. Children who are 5 or younger are more likely to think that this game is fun. At least 2 kids are gathered together, or, ideally, 3 or 4. The game rules are explained to the participants and the short song is taught to them. The kids should understand the objective is to sit down after the singing is completed. A circle is formed with the kids by join hands with each other. The children walk around in a circle while singing this song together the short song. At the end of the song, the children stop walking and quickly sit down on the last word of the short song. The last one standing is out of the game and sits off to the side while the game continues. |  | that point out the winner. The one who get more points will be given elastic bands from his opponents as per agreed quantity before the start of the game. ‘Squares are drawn on the ground with numbers. A line is drawn 6 feet approx. from the squares. An elastic band which is known as “lastik” in Creole is thrown on squares. If the elastic band fell on any number of the squares, the same amount of elastic band you get in reward. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>– Zwe lekours kamaleon: One holds his team mate by his legs and the latter moves forward by using his hands. The duo who arrives first becomes the winner.</li> <li>– Zwe maye (Tag Game): It is a playground game that involves one or more players chasing other players in an attempt to grab or touch them, usually with their hands. There are however some variations. A group of players (two or more) decide who is going to be the chasers and who are going to be the chased ones, often using a counting-out game such as ‘Un pain ti godon’ or ‘C.U.P cup’. The chasers then chases the others to get close enough to ‘tag’ grab or touch them—a touch with the hand—while the others try to escape. Players may be safe from being tagged within a pre-determined area, when off the ground, or when touching a particular structure. This safe zone has been called a "goal" in Creole “Bite” which stands for “But” in French. Another variation of the “Tag Game” is the “Cops and Robbers Game” in Creole “Zwe Polis Voler”. After having decided who will be the ‘Cops’ and who will be the ‘Robbers’ using a counting-out game as mentioned above, a pre-determined area is determined as the ‘Jail’ - “prizon” in Creole. The Cops then try to catch the robbers and when caught are placed in the ‘Jail’. Yet caught robbers can be freed if their fellow free robbers manage to touch them in the jail area and the game continues. This game is usually played with fake guns in order to imitate true cops and robbers. Another variation of the ‘Tag Game’ is the Freeze Game’, in Creole “Zwe Stati”. After having decided who will be the chasers and who will be the chased ones using a counting-out game as mentioned previously the game can begin. The chasers then chases the others to get close enough to touch them—a touch with the hand—while the others try to escape. The one touched remains still, freezes like a statue until freed by one of his fellow team mate by a touch. And the game goes on.</li> <li>– Zwe passe-passe: This traditional playground game develops children's ball skills and their concentration - it really keeps them on their toes! Children stand around in a circle with a ball as appropriate for the age group (such as a basketball). The ball is thrown quickly around and across the circle. When a child catches the ball, the children on either side must, raise one arm - the arm nearest the child with the ball - and hold it in the air until the ball is passed on to another child. If a child fails to catch the ball, or fails to raise the correct arm when their neighbour catches the ball, or is too slow to pass the ball along, they drop out. When there are only five children left in the circle, they are all declared winners, and the game starts again.</li> <li>– Zwe petang: This game is played with iron balls which are thrown by players on the ground. It is played similarly as marbles are played.</li> <li>– Zwe pomdeter avek kouyer: This game is mostly played on sports days by pre-primary children. The player had to hold a potato in a spoon and run from the start line to the finishing line. The first who is able to reach the finishing line without let the potato to fall is declared as winner.</li> <li>– Zwe rikose: This involves throwing a small rock or flat object on the surface of the water and sees how many times it will bounce before it sinks.</li> </ul> |

Traditional shapes include diamond, butterflies, fish and among others. A plan of a diamond kite is shown below: Kites are lifted by a running person. Necessary lift that makes the kite wing fly is generated when air flows over and under the kite's wing, producing low pressure above the wing and high pressure below it. This deflection also generates horizontal drag along the direction of the wind. Movement in the air is then controlled by pulling or releasing the string attached to the kite by the person controlling it. This game is the famous kite flying and is believed to be originated from China as well as India. There are several types of kites which are played in Mauritius: "rwa dezer", "kare", "patang", "papiyon", "karanbol", and "mamzel". Long time ago, kite flying was like an air war for children. They had to build their own kites with coloured muslin paper, bamboo, raffia sting, glued with cooked rice or a mixture of flour and water. Some children even use newspapers and glue instead of muslin paper, rice, or flour.</li> <li>- Zwe sot dan sak goni: Starting line and finishing line is drawn on the ground. Children wear a bag made which was used to stored rice long time ago. They have to jump till the fishing line. This game is used as sports competition in schools. Children get into a bag which is commonly used to stock rice. They have to jump from starting line to finishing line. The one who arrives first to the finishing line wins the game.</li> <li>- Zwe sot lakord/lakord sote: There are two types of sot la cord: one where two people holding the rope at each end turn it and a third person jump and the other one the same person turn and jump. The first one can be accompanied by a song of "le palais royale". Two players turn the rope and one player has to skip. The one who touches the rope while skipping loses the game. Long time ago people used lianas like "leng" or "batatran" as skipping rope.</li> <li>- Zwe sot mouton: In this game, one has to bend and the other jump over his friend.</li> <li>- In Mauritius there are several traditional games which are based on songs or are accompanied by songs. The players will sing the specific songs pertaining to that game when they play around.</li> <li>- Ala rond timike: This is a singing game played by children in many parts of Mauritius. Children form a circle by holding each other each other hands. At the end of the song the one who smile or laugh is eliminated from the game.</li> <li>- Ali Ali Gari Bagha: sung in Marathi language it is popular game where they imitate the train.</li> <li>- Kuruvi Kuruvi Parondu Va: sung in Tamil language, this singing game takes the child straight into the lap of nature. Children imitate the movements of birds, make flying motions and try to explore the hidden world of birds.</li> <li>- Lapli Laponp: This is traditional children singing game originated from France. For this game, a group of children is required. Two children hold each other's hand forming an arc. Children go around them passing under the arc in a single file arrangement by singing the song "lapli lapom larivier du Rhonde..." The game continues till only one player is left. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>– Nukalu Pedatanu: sung in Telugu language, this singing game promotes in children qualities of alertness and quickness apart from developing muscle coordination. Children also learn concepts of wild animals of which they hear a lot in stories narrated to them.</li> <li>– Oka Boka Tinto Loka: sung in Bhojpuri language, it has its origin in Indian State of Uttar Pradesh but with a few minor modifications in Mauritius.</li> <li>– Siao Tchín Woa Ya: sung in Chinese language, the players sing and run around pretending to catch insects which are injurious to health.</li> <li>– Siter siter panari / Kas kas dan kilabarab: two girls hold each other hands and run circularly singing the song ‘siter siter panari’. According to Ramdin this game is from Creole origin. In French this term is written as “Cythère Cythère Panari” means children rounds.</li> <li>– Zakana zakana bebe: an old and well-known children’s play-song with different versions and in Creole language. This game is also a traditional signing game and is mostly played by girls. A group of girl is lined up face a player who plays the role of a wolf. The first girl in the row plays the role of the mother who has the duty to protect her children. All of the players jump up and down along with the first player and sing the song ‘zakana zakana bébé’. The wolf has to catch the other girls. This game is believed to be of African origin. The word ‘zakana’ is derived from the African bird Jacana (Actophilornis africanus). This bird defends their territories especially after reproduction period.</li> <li>– Langaz madam sere: The coded language of “Langaz Madam Sere” may be traced back to the time of slaves. This language is a mixture of French and Mauritian Creole where every syllable is doubled with the first consonants replaced by the “g” (e.g. “Français” becomes “frangrançaisgais”). The origin and purpose of this language remains unclear.</li> <li>– Zwe imit dokter, mis lekol, boutikie: In this game, the role of teacher, Doctor and shopkeeper are being imitated.</li> <li>– Zwe lakaz zouzou: Literally, this term means toy house which was most of the time played by girls with their dolls. Toys like tea, dinner set are also used in this game. Long time ago, used tin cans were used. Sometimes, children pluck fruits or take whatever they were allowed to take from kitchen were used.</li> <li>– Zwe lasiet kase: in this game, old broken plates are used. Broken plates are further broken in small pieces and are used as coins in Imitating games like shopkeeper.</li> <li>– Zwe loto malere: A wooden box or trunk of a tree is used for this game. Several children sit on the trunk or wooden box and produce vehicle sounds with their mouth.</li> <li>– Zwe poupet sifon: Poupet means doll. Long time ago a doll could represent by any kind of object for example, a bottle could represent a doll for some girls, or at times doll were made from a piece of cloth (“poupet sifon”).</li> <li>– Zwe telefont lamok (tin can telephone): A tin can telephone is a type of voice-transmitting device made up of two tin cans, paper cups or similarly shaped items</li> </ul> |

It marks the beginning of the Dravidian New Year in Tamil Nadu. This festival is held on the first day of Tamil month Chithiram, which usually falls on the 14th of April. It is believed that Lord Brahma, (the God of creation, according to Hindu mythology) began creating the world on this day. On the occasion of Tamil New Year day, Tamils believe that offering special prayers in the temple brings them prosperity. It is also the day to give an auspicious start to the coming year by looking at all nice and wonderful things such as gold, fresh fruits, vegetables, rice, betel leaves, nuts and coconuts, which are kept in a decorated pile in front of the garlanded deity. A special dish called 'Maanga Pachadi', made of raw mangoes, jaggery and neem flowers is served during lunch. This signifies all the different aspects of our life, reminding us to face happiness and sorrow with equal ease. Since this festival marks the beginning of the New Year, food prepared is very special, with particular emphasis on pulses and cereals. Gifts are also given to domestic workers and others. The descendants of Tamil in Mauritius celebrate this with great fervour in the country as well. |                              |

Ugadi comes from the word Yug and Adi which means Era and beginning that is the beginning of a year (the Lunar year). Thus, Yugadi means the beginning of a new period, the beginning of the New Year. It is celebrated in the late March or at even the beginning of April. There is every reason to believe that Ugadi is the first festival of the Hindus. Ugadi also recalls the victory of Shalivhana, the king of Satvahanas over the invading Shakas a tribe from Central Asia. These Satavahanas were called Andhras because they were of Andhra origin, gautamiputra Satakarni has been regarded as the most outstanding among the Satavahanas who flourish boundaries of the Satavahans empire extended and the rulers enjoyed imperial titles like Samrat (Emperor), ‘the lord of Dakshinapath’. In Andhra Pradesh, Ugadi is celebrated with great pomp and splendor. In Mauritius too, this festival is celebrated among the Telegu community with great joy and enthusiasm. Houses of Telegu are beautifully decorated: fresh mango leaves are tied to form a garland and hung on the doorway. While the floor is also decorated with the moggu-rangoli (a colourful rice, powder and different elements). It is believed that these help to ward off evil powers. On this auspicious day, early in the morning after the ceremonial bath, everyone wears new clothes, do prayers, Ugadi Pacchadi made up of neem flowers, green mango, tamarind, jiggery, and salt and chillies prepared specially for that occasion is presented as prasadam (offering) to God. This offering is a mixture of six ingredients representing the different aspects of life. Neem, for example is extremely bitter and jiggery is extremely sweet. Tasting this symbolical blessed offering, means that we are ready to accept life with its success and failures, its ups and downs, union and separation, joy and sorrow, pain and pleasure. Coconuts, bananas and flowers are also offered and later distributed to relatives, neighbours and friends. In Mauritius, Ugadi is an important festival and a public holiday. Cultural shows are organized at regional level by socio-cultural organizations. Ugadi, the new year of Telegus is the occasion to sing glory of God and beauty of His Creation. It also provides opportunity for purifying and strengthening the spirit in this age of stress and strain. |                               |

| 1.5              | Short description Sankranti marks an important position of the earth in relation to the Sun. In most families, time is marked by celebrations of the traditional preparation of the menu item, the kitchiri, made of rice, lentils or dhol and spices accompanied by grilled tomato chutney or coconut. For Tamils, they prepare the pongal, a preparation of rice, milk and fruit, all cooked together. Traditionally, family members get up early in the morning for a ritual bath before saying prayers and observe rituals. Tribute is then paid to the Sun God, Surya Devta by pouring water from a container, looking toward the sun. Other devotees choose to do it in their respective temple of their villages. Makar Sankranti is considered as the most suitable day for prayers and religious ceremonies. It is the day when the sun rises from the Tropic of Cancer to the Tropic of Capricorn. Settled by the solar calendar, it is considered the most important, especially with the coming of the Sun's southern hemisphere in the northern hemisphere. Recall that in time, in rural areas, especially in the camps and sugar, the festival Sankranti was commonly known as 'banané Hindu' in part because of its proximity to the holidays of New Year (as per the Christian Calendar). Thus the Hindus then gave more to this festival by wearing the best clothes on this day. Hindu lunar calendar depicts that the Sankranti is the New Year for the Hindus. |                                       |

A ‘gudhi’ is a pole with a cloth tied to it, while the word ‘padwa’ refers to the first day of the calendar. The festival is rich in symbolism which can be viewed from a religious, spiritual, cultural and historical perspective. Marathis believe that Lord Brahma created the universe on this very day; the Guddi symbolizes Lord Ram’s victory and happiness on returning to Ayodhya after killing the demon Ravana. It is believed that this festival is celebrated to commemorate the coronation of Ram as part his return to his home land. The Gudhi is also believed to ward off evil and invite prosperity and good luck into peoples’ poems and spirituality is also very important to them. It is believed that Guddi Padwa is the day that the sun and the planets align, bestowing strong spiritual vibrations on to the world, that enter the minds and bodies of the devotees as they pray. The festival is celebrated by setting up a tradition which has been handed down from generation to generation. The gudhi is a bamboo pole, to which flowers, mango leaves and neem leaves are tied along with a new piece of silk cloth. Rice and money rapped in the piece of silk and a brass or silver pot called kalash is placed over the top of the pole. The components of the gudhi represent the three necessities of mankind: rice represents food, the cloth is clothing and the kalash symbolizes the need for shelter. Gudhi Padwa also has great historical significance for Maharashtra (the place of origin of the Marathi people).The gudhi with its silk cloth also represents a flag hoisted a sign of victory. |                                |

The Spring Festival falls on the first day of the first lunar month, often one month later than the Gregorian calendar. It originated in the Shang Dynasty (c. 1600 BC-c. 1100 BC) from the people's sacrifice to gods and ancestors at the end of an old year and the beginning of a new one. Strictly speaking, the Spring Festival starts every year in the early days of the 12th lunar month and will last till the mid 1st lunar month of the next year. Of them, the most important days are Spring Festival Eve and the first three days. On the 8th day of the 12th lunar month, many families make laba porridge, a delicious kind of porridge made with glutinous rice, millet, seeds of Job's tears, jujube berries, lotus seeds, beans, longan and ginkgo. The 23rd day of the 12th lunar month is called Preliminary Eve. At this time, people offer sacrifice to the kitchen god. Now however, most families make delicious food. After the Preliminary Eve, people begin preparing for the coming New Year. This is called "Seeing the New Year in". Before the New Year comes general cleaning is done and the house and surrounding is decorated for an atmosphere of rejoicing and festivity. All the door panels will be pasted with Spring Festival couplets, highlighting Chinese calligraphy with black characters on red paper. The content varies from house owners' wishes for a bright future to good luck for the New Year. Also, pictures of the god of doors and wealth will be posted on front doors to ward off evil spirits and welcome peace and abundance. The Chinese character "fu" (meaning blessing or happiness) is a must. The character put on paper can be pasted normally or upside down, for in Chinese the "reversed fu" is homophonic with "fu comes", both being pronounced as "fudaole." What's more, two big red lanterns can be raised on both sides of the front door. Red paper-cuttings can be seen on window glass and brightly colored New Year paintings with auspicious meanings may be put on the wall. People attach great importance to Spring Festival Eve. Prayers are performed to welcome the New Year and families get together for special lunch and dinner. Sharing gato la cire is a must in Mauritius on that occasion. Burning fireworks is one of the most typical customs on the Spring Festival. Mauritians especially of the Chinese community celebrate it with great fervour and perform dragon and lion dance in different places for the public. |                             |

Each year, the Eid is hailed and celebrated by Muslims around the world with uncommon jubilation and pride. The festival of Eid ul-Fitr is the most joyful occasion in the Islamic calendar. It marks the end of the sacred month of Ramadan in the Islamic calendar. During the Ramadan Muslims all over the world fast from dawn to sunset, abstaining from food and drink and worldly pleasures and endeavouring to live a life of piety and charity in obedience to the command of Allah (God). Indeed, there pervades among the Muslims during the month of Ramadan, a profound sense of serenity and goodwill. The Eid festival in Mauritius has always been celebrated with solemn enthusiasm and joy by the Muslims. The day begins with the special Eid Namaz (Prayer) at the mosque, which every Muslim makes it a point to attend. After the Eid Namaz, Muslims embrace each other and exchange Eid greetings and there are smiles on every face. Many Muslims also exchange gifts with family members and often seek the forgiveness of any offence or hurt done to friends and relatives. Eid el-Fitr celebrations gained national dimension in Mauritius in 1985. Since 1961, it was already a public holiday. Moreover, Eid el-Fitr is now reckoned as one of the national festivals of multi-cultural Mauritius and on Eid Day, the Eidga'ah becomes the focal point of Eid celebrations in the country. |                                |

It is usually in June in the Gregorian calendar. Dragon boat racing is an indispensable part of the festival, held at the Caudan Waterfront. As the gun is fired, people will see racers in dragon-shaped canoes pulling the oars harmoniously and hurriedly, accompanied by rapid drums, speeding toward their destination. On Dragon Boat Festival, parents also need to dress their children up with a perfume pouch. They first sew little bags with colorful silk cloth, then fill the bags with perfumes or herbal medicines, and finally string them with silk threads. The perfume pouch will be hung around the neck or tied to the front of a garment as an ornament. They are said to be able to ward off evil. Zongzi is an essential food of the Dragon Boat Festival. It is said that people ate them in the Spring and Autumn Period (770-476 BC). In early times, it was only glutinous rice dumplings wrapped in reed or other plant leaves and tied with colored thread, but now the fillings are more diversified, including jujube and bean paste, fresh meat, and ham and egg yolk. If time permits, people will soak glutinous rice, wash reed leaves and wrap up zongzi themselves. Otherwise, they will go to shops to buy whatever stuff they want. |                      |

Born on 18th September 1803 in the village of Croth in Normandy, Père Laval was the son of a well-to-do farmer. After succeeding brilliantly at his studies, he became a doctor in 1830. However, weary of a hectic social life and affected by a fall from a horse that could have lost his life, Jacques Désiré Laval entered the Seminary of Issy-les-Moulineaux, near Paris, in 1835. Four years later, he became a priest and was appointed to a small parish near Pinterville. His encounter with Monsignor William Collier, then the Apostolic Vicar of Mauritius, was a momentous one. Collier spoke to him of the island of freed slaves, in need of evangelization. Père Laval left for London, where he embarked on the Tanjore on 4 June 1842 and arrived in Mauritius 100 days later. Père Laval began his ministry in Port-Louis at the Church of Saint Louis, which was to become a Cathedral in 1847. He spent the remaining 23 years of his life on the island, devoting himself to the poorest members of the community. Shortly after his arrival, he was put in charge of the Mission to the Negroes and immediately set out to learn Creole. He criss-crossed the island on the back of his donkey, in his patched cassock, to accomplish his missionary work. His flock included former slaves originally from Mozambique and Madagascar but also Indians, Malays and Comorians. Jacques Désiré Laval was a long way from pleasing everyone, for he greeted his ‘dear blacks’ by calling them ‘Sir’ and ‘Madam’ which greatly displeased the bourgeoisie of the time, who nicknamed him la grosse bête noire literally ‘the big black beast’. But that did not bother him at all. He continued tirelessly with his work, also taking care of hospital patients and prisoners, even accompanying many of the latter to their execution. Insisting on the right to education for everyone, he gave impetus to the building of schools in some of the more remote parts of the island. This did not distract him from his missionary work and he was personally involved in the construction of prayer meeting houses throughout the island. Even when most of his work was destroyed by a violent cyclone in March 1848, a major setback, everything was reconstructed by the faithful. Vilified by those who did not look kindly on the interest he took in the former slaves. Pere Laval even found himself needing police protection to be able to maintain the evening classes he ran. However, the majority of the colonists were willing to accept him for the charitable work he was carrying out. Père Laval also put his medical knowledge to people’s service. In 1854, 1856 and 1861, the island suffered epidemics variously of cholera or smallpox. He was at the bedside of thousands of sufferers night and day, irrespective of their religious beliefs and race. As time passed, the health of Jacques Désiré Laval himself deteriorated. Undermined by successive attacks of apoplexy, he finally died on 9 September 1864. Some 20,000 people visited the mortuary to pay their last respects to the man whose works had made him an apostle to the Mauritians; 40,000 people accompanied him to his final resting place. Père Laval, a humble priest who devoted his life to the very poor, became the first person to be beatified by Pope Jean Paul II in St Peter’s Basilica in Rome, on 29 April 1979. The Pope went to his tomb of Père Laval when he visited the island in 1989 and the ‘Little Father of the poor’; Abbé Pierre also went there in |                                   |

|     | 1994. Père Laval is a saint for Mauritians and each year believers are there to pay homage and pray him. Devotees of all communities come there and pray and according to them their prayers are fulfilled through Père Laval. A legend says that when died, his body did not get decomposed even after five years. He can be said to be a Mauritian Saint who is respected and prayed by all believers. As Father Bernard Hym, ancient priest-in-charge of Père Laval Centre at Sainte-Croix said, it is clear that Mauritians do not see Père Laval as belonging just to one single community. |      |

Devotees participate in great number doing an annual pilgrimage to the lake of Grand Bassin where several temples are found. In 1972; the sacred water of the Ganges was poured in the lake of Grand Bassin, and then named “Ganga Talao”. On the 14th night of the dark half of Magh during the month of “phalgouna” (February – March), Maha Shivaratri, the night of Lord Shiva is universally celebrated among the Hindus. In the Hindu mythology, a number of legends trace the origin of the Maha Shivaratri festival. In Mauritius Maha Shivaratree is especially related to the Grand Bassin, whereby devotees (Hindus and others) gather for prayers and collect water which will afterwards be poured on the Shiva ling – representative of Lord Shiva. Preparations for Maha Shivratri start several weeks before the Maha Shivratri itself. People start fasting and most importantly they start making their kanwars- a structure traditionally made of bamboo but nowadays it is also made of wooden planks and adorned with plastics or cloth and with several decorative items and without forgetting small mirrors. Most of the kanwars resemble little temples and have statues or photos of Gods placed on them- most preferably of Lord Shiva. Four or five days before the Maha Shivaratri, processions of devotees take place towards the Grand Bassin. Men, women and children, all dressed in white, walk in procession from different parts of the island to fetch water from Grand Bassin to pour it on Shiv Lings of their respective village shivalas. Hindu, non-Hindus and foreigners, participate in this pilgrimage which is done in groups of friends or families. Many devotees carry kanwars on their shoulders and some are pushed on wheels. Most of the kanwars are carried by either one person or four persons depending on their size and weight. Devotional songs are sung at high pitch all the way. Tents can be found all the way long in which devotees are freely served with refreshments and food by different associations and families. These tents are also the resting and sleeping places for the devotees. Devotees could be found sleeping under the verandas of shops and some devotees do not even sleep during their pilgrimage. It is also a tradition to have only fruits and juice during this pilgrimage but it is not largely practiced nowadays. On the night of the Maha Shivaratri ‘chaar pahar ki puja’ is held where the holy water of Grand Bassin is poured on the shiv lings and the prayers are held in honour of Lord Shiva till the next morning. Bhajans and kirtans- pious songs- are also sung all night long. This annual pilgrimage is an important event in the religious and cultural life of Mauritius. |                                |

| 1.5                    | Short description It consists of a religious ceremony which the devotees of Goddess Draupadi celebrates by fasting for a minimum of 10 days fasting and then walk on hot charcoal in honour to the Goddess. On the festival day itself, the devout participants have to go to the nearest river of their locality for bath and prayer, prior to marching in procession to their destination i.e. the temple in campus of which the fire has been worked up for the walking ceremony. On this very day, the devotees us saffron or crocus, bathe-in-saffron-water and put on dresses dyed with saffron. Participants make use of whole gamut of crocus because of its cooling effect. When the time for the approach of the devotees the big rectangular fire-place is ringed with a strong rope to ward off the achuta, i.e. impurities and evils. The chief priest of the temple ties a string of lilac leaf containing a piece of crocus, around the wrist of each of the devotees. This called capu. Once the devotee has walked over the wood-embers in the long and large rectangular plot, he dips this foot in a small ditch containing crocus, water and milk. The string is then united. Once this final ritualistic action is performed, the devotee becomes his own self. |                                            |

The cavadees are structures made of wooden planks which are beautifully decorated with green leaves, flowers, tender shoots of the coconut and lemons. Peacock feathers are also used to adorn the cavadee. The cavadee are carried on shoulders by the devotees. Brass bells are tied to cavadees to announce the approach of the cavadee carriers who observe the vow of silence during the procession. Ten days before this festival, a flag with photo of a hen is hoisted on a pillar- called kodi maram – which is placed permanently in front of the Kovil- Tamil temple. The white flag being hoisted reminds people that cavadee festival will be held soon and devotees should observe a period of fast known as Kodi Ettram. In the afternoon, congregational prayers are held in the temples. So, people take their ritual bath and do regular prayers and chant sacred verses to glorify Lord Muruga. On the eighth day a special prayer is held at the temples and all the devotees go thrice round the temple carrying the idol of Lord Muruga. On the ninth day during the prayer, they carry the Vel (Lord Muruga's spear) and walk around the temple. On the eve of the festival the whole night is spent in preparing the cavadee. Relatives, neighbours and friends come to help in structuring the cavadee and decorating it. For the great event, the devotees go to the temples from where they proceed to nearby rivers for the ritual bath and they put on a saffron coloured garb. Women wear saffron sarees and blouses, young girls wear dresses of the same colour. Men wear a dhoti with the upper part of the body left bare. The chest, forehead and shoulders are smeared with vibhuti (sacred ash). They also wear rosaries around their necks. After invoking Lord Muruga, the priest pours fresh cow milk in the pots which are tied to the cavadee. Ladies carry milk pots on their head which are covered with a red cloth. Later on, the same milk is offered to Lord Muruga in the temple. Silence is strictly observed by the pilgrims in the procession. Some devotees wrap a piece of red cloth around the mouth and others pierce their tongues with a small silver spear (vel) to keep the vow of silence. Many devotees follow rigorous practices as piercing the cheeks, the arms, the tongue and the forehead with small silver needles, sleeping on nail-beds, walking on nailed slippers and pulling small cavadees on wheels hooked to the skin at their waist. The cavadee bearers walk barefooted and carry the vel, the mystic divine weapon of Lord Muruga. Devotional songs on loud speakers and kolattam dance all along with the procession add more pomp to the festival. At each crossroad the procession stops and the priest do some rituals before proceeding. The person leading the procession walks on a sandal full of nails and he beats his back with sticks and at each crossroad he walks round the pilgrims. When the procession reaches the temple, the main ritual is to offer the two pots of milk to Lord Muruga. Before entering the kovil the devotee has to make a round of the kovil by getting into |                              |

Some milk is kept as prasadam which is distributed without any discrimination to all pilgrims. Partaking of the milk is carried out with great joy and a feeling of spiritual attainment. In this way, the main events of cavadee festival are completed with great celebrity. For the devotees, the activities of cavadee festival end on the following day i.e. the eleventh day. The banner which is normally hoisted ten days prior to the festival has to be brought down. The eleventh day ceremony is known as Kodi Irakkam. After this ceremony leaves and flowers used for the cavadee are immersed in the river and then the fasting period is over. |      |

The Ramabhajanamou usually takes place on a Saturday; it starts at five o'clock in the afternoon and does not end until the next morning. This is practiced by the Telegus in Mauritius. A pandal (marquee) is erected that is decorated by a toranalou (a rope), that hang from mango leaves and flowers of vivid colors. The lamp is erected on a Ramabhajanamou mouggou. Focus of the celebration, is the altar and all the offerings that we have prepared for this occasion will be offered to the god Rama. Participants and guests share a ritual meal to incorporate vegetarian dishes typically Telugu. Usually we prepare seven dishes of vegetables: beans, curry, green banana, pumpkin, Jacques of green, potato curry and rasam. It also serves peas, sweets and appalam with saggou. Many are offering among other fruits, coconuts to the Lord Rama to get him favours. People sing and dance in ecstasy to the beat of drums and cymbals made of copper. Before dawn, the participants travel in procession to the nearest river or the sea with the upper portion of the lamp. After having venerated the waters as they would in the Ganges, they wash the lamp in the river or the sea, returning to share prasadam offering dedicated. |                              |

| 1.5                       | Short description Eid el-Adha is the other festival in the Islamic calendar. It is celebrated at the end of the Hajj (pilgrimage to Mecca), rituals on the tenth day of the Islamic month of Zul-Hujjah and which is an obligatory component of Islam that enjoins all Muslims to undertake. On the day of Eid el-Adha and also during the two following days, Muslims also perform the sacrifice of a goat, sheep or head of cattle. The meat of the sacrifices animal is then distributed among the needy and under-privileged who get a larger share in preference to relatives and friends. In the 1920's and 1930's, it was customary with the wealthy Gujerati Muslim merchants and traders of port-Louis to host on Eid Day an Aam Khana (dinner) on the grounds of the Arabian Docks and at the Taher Bagh. They would invite Muslims from across the island and treat them. |                                 |

One of the most celebrated customs observed by the Muslims of Mauritius is the Tenth Day of Huharram or Ghoon, Tazi'a or Yamseh, as it is popularly known in Mauritius. Muharram is the first month of the Islamic calendar. The ghoons or tazi'as are onion-shape domed structures carried on trolleys or on shoulders of volunteers carriers. The Lever and the Casser des Ghounes are the highlights of the occasion. The procession of ghoons is a colourful one. Huge crowds of people from all over the island converge to Plaine-Verte, which assumes for the occasion a carnival atmosphere. Many Muslims, do not care for the Ghoon as a festive occasion and would not take part of it. This is particularly true of Sunni Muslims. However, many others participate as spectators. Also many non-Muslims take part in the rituals of the Ghoon in fulfillment of a vow or a promise. This is usually done through a visit with offerings of sweets and money, to a darga'ah (shrine) often improvised for the occasion. On the night of the Lever des Ghounes, the tazi'as are paraded in long colourful procession down the streets of Plaine Verte. The ghoons or tazi'as are onion-shape domed structures carried on trolleys or on shoulders of volunteers carriers. Some ghoons are over ten metres high and rower above the roofs of houses and trees where their glittering peaks often catch the fading light of the setting sun and flash like gems against the brilliant twilight sky. The skeletons of the tazi'as are made of light wood or bamboo sticks and covered with 'coloured paper and electric bulbs'. Each tazi'a is mounted on a set of superimposed domes, each of different shape and size and has four, six, seven or eight sides. The Casser des Ghounes which marks the end of Muharm, is held the next day. There is a procession similar to the one held the previous night. However, the mood is more somber and subdued. There are no lights, no lanterns and the crowd is usually less lively. The procession proceeds to Riviere des Lataniers from where the miy'an had been brought ten days earlier. |                                   |

| 1.5             | Short description The Govinden festival is celebrated by the Tamils between Mid-September and Mid-October every year. It is called Puratasi Viradam i.e. fast observed in the month of Puratasi. Those who are involved in its observation are to take only vegetarian food, refrain from taking intoxicants, smoking and abstain from sexual relation. Govinden festival is dedicated to Lord Krishna or Lord Vishnu, for Lord Krishna was an incarnation of Lord Vishnu. The devotees observe fast every Saturday during the fasting period. They take nothing in the morning. But at 2 p.m a ceremony is held, after which a feast is given to them. Friends, relatives and neighbours are invited to share the feast with the devotees concerned. This feast is consecrated to Lord Krishna. In the late afternoon, in each of the Kovil or Tamil temple, prayers are organized. The devotees make it a point to come over there for participation in those prayers and devout activities. In the temple itself, one could see how the deity concerned is adorned on the altar. There is hardly anybody in the devout lot who would not spare himself or herself to make the organised religious work a success. The altar actually groans with all sorts of offerings laid thereon and around. One of the objects that draw our attention is a lamp with several branches called kambaserai. This beautiful multi-branches lamp is lighted and it marks thus the beginning of the ceremony. Each devotee is supposed to bring some oil for the lamp. Boys and girls join hands together to dance and perform the kumbi, i.e. the clapping of hands as an accompaniment of the dance. There is also music played with a whole gamut of instruments. All these hectic activities in the holy temples are directed towards the praise of God. There are several groups of such entertainers giving their performance each in turn. Such nice and entertaining activities go on incessantly for quite some time. On Saturday night, the devotees visit temples where ceremonies in connection with the festival Govinden are held. They can visit seven temples if they do so want. The choice of such temples for visiting lies on the devotees themselves; they are free to pick up those they prefer. When the morning dawns, another prayer is offered. It would be good to note that the ceremonies differ in some measures from place to place, yet there is unity of purpose. At Mahebourg, for instance, people prefer going to the sea and making their offerings there. The atmosphere and surroundings may be more congenial to them, hence their difference of choice for places. Thereafter, they bid adieu. The ceremony covers four to five Saturdays, depending on the number of Saturdays the month of fasting offers. The last Saturday is celebrated in grand manner. At Fanfaron, Port-Louis, for instance, this celebration is indeed grandiose. Annadanam is one of the distinguishing features of the ceremony; devotees are given food to eat. |                              |

| 1.5                 | Short descriptionIn February-March that the ceremony takes place. But just like the March on fire, there are exceptions to this rule. In India, the festivities in honour of Amman are usually held in summer. Summer is the season of heavy rains causing serious damage to crops and decimated livestock. In Mauritius, the dust will stick to the Kathi Pousai more like a penance for some sin or ask for the grace of the goddess for a family member. After consultation with the Tamil calendar Panchangam was announced to all the date and time of ponsai (worship). A fast of ten-day is observed by potential participants who submit themselves to a life of austerity and sexual abstinence. The meal was frugal during these ten days, the food is strictly vegetarian. No fish and even less meat. Throughout the period of fasting, the devotees will go every night in the temple dedicated to Amman. A saffron flag kodi (floating mat) kodi Maraam announces the start of fasting. Yellow is the favourite colour of the goddess. The devotees gather every night and so are offerings to turn: the sweet rice pudding cooked (pongal), flowers, fruits, camphor, sandal sticks among others. A small amount of each of these offerings is placed before the goddesses and sacred verses are recited, magnifying its various attributes. The entire assembly participates in worship and recitation. The atmosphere is involved, all imbued with intense fervour. Some worshipers go into a trance, their bodies taken tremors. The priest then comes forward with the thumb and coating the front of the penitent sacred ash and found it right away peacefully. |                              |

| 1.5                                | Short descriptionWitches go to crossroads and to heathen burials with their delusive magic and call to the devils and he comes to them in the likeness of the man that is buried there as if arises from death. In Mauritius also, crossroads are important places to be in contact with souls or what we call here: zeni de la krwaze, some minor supernatural being that can help someone in an action and may cause misfortune to a person. The witches invoke malevolent ghostly spirits to harm people by possessing them. The ghost takes control of the bodies and mind of their victims so that they fall ill, goes mad, become unable to bear children or find them thwarted at every turn. The witches also dried up trees to know that their exercise was successful. |                                                |

| 1.5                         | Short descriptionIn Mauritius, a practice existing amongst people practicing witchcraft is their transformation in werewolf. People believe and tell that sorcerer may transform his body in any animal or object such as a dog, a horse etc and will harm people during the night. This transformation occurs only one night. In the morning the sorcerer will find back his human body. Some people say that we can catch the werewolf by throwing lentils on the road. The sorcerer will count these and put them in lamok troué and will not be able to count them. Then in the morning, he will still be counting and will be transformed in his human shape with the rising sun. Another way to catch the werewolf is to use magic bullets to shot the werewolf. But to touch him, the hunter has to be on a tree, preferably a tamarind tree so that the werewolf will not be able to see him. |                  |

Here, it is common to hear people talking about ‘one threw a bad luck’ or ‘someone has cast a spell’. There are sorcerers who make an abuse and play on emotional weakness of their victims. They use several tricks to persuade as speak a magical language. The ritual language can be described as possessing a high ‘coefficient of weirdness’ that is the language used in ritual is archaic and out of ordinary, which helps to foster the proper mindset to believe in the ritual. Other actions typically consist of gestures, possibly performed with special objects at a particular place or time. Object, location and performer may require purification. Flaunt photographs of religious deities; go to mysterious places like cemeteries in the middle of the night. There are some who even throw lemons, candles, cards at the crossroad of residential areas. These victims of witchcraft are from all social and all socio-professional categories. Traits of the voodoo can also be found in the witchcraft in Mauritius. |                     |

This ceremony will once again vary as group the Christian group that is Catholic, Anglican or protestant and others. The Hindu communities mark the birth of a child with the ceremony of ‘baigner’ which is performed on the sixth and 12th days after the birth. This ceremony will vary as per the ethnic group despite being of the Hindu religion. Islam followers as well have their special way of initiating a new born to this world. One of the most rare and not very popular rituals is the ‘zenfan beigner’. Some African descendants used to perform the ‘zenfan beigner’, a ceremony similar whereby the baby is given a special bath with water where a dead snake was kept for some time. Actually it has medicinal properties and this is beneficial for the baby. However this was done secretly as it was not accepted by the church. Some people still practise this ceremony. The zenfan bainye ritual was performed among Creoles in urban areas like Port-Louis and in villages like Bambous Virieux during the 19th and 20th centuries. There were several types of ‘baths’, some required water as supposed by its name while others describes as ‘dry’ because they did not required water and was more appropriate for the child’s parents. One of the most powerful water baths was the dilo entre de, meaning taken at an estuary. It was mostly performed for male baby preferably not yet baptised in Catholic or Christian churches. It was believed that the baptismal blessing interfered with the bath. The requirements for the dilo entre de bath were water taken from an estuary, a mixture of several powdered magical herbs (herbe Pok Pok and Sansitiv) and most importantly a freshly caught dead eel. The healer bonded the wet paste with a type of clay then the whole preparation was sun dried and the resulting pellet was pulverized. At the beginning of the ceremony, the healer would first recite an incantation, dip the child’s feet in the water, then his hands and finished by semi-immersing the infant in the tub. The effects of the bath were that the child would grow with special abilities such as being more perceptive or psychic about people’s intentions. Other baths such as bain lamer or bain larivyer are rather practiced today by adults than children. The healer would semi immerse the person in the water while pronouncing the necessary incantation. The objective of the ritual was to gift the person with psychic ability, intelligence and ability to defend himself same as dilo entre de. There were also baths for baby girls and it was called bain lasane, carried out with powdered magical concoctions. The healer would make a superficial incision on the baby’s arm then smear the powder into the wound. The purpose of this was to mix the powers contained in the magical powder with the child’s blood thus fortifying her against the harness of life. |                        |

| 1.5                                   | Short descriptionThe Christian wedding usually takes place in a church before a priest. A traditional Hindu wedding ceremony lasts for days normally starting on start on a Friday evening till Monday night. It will be accompanied by several rituals before and after the main wedding ceremony. The rituals are normally accompanied by special songs and prayers. The weddings will also vary in the different communities. The Muslims will do the nikah. Basically the weddings are done according to the rites and rituals of the respective religious beliefs. However, it is interesting to note that they have been adapted to a Mauritian context and also they have incorporated bits and pieces of other communities in the ceremonies. |                                                    |

| 1.5                | Short descriptionLike many festivals and customs, the origin is much more prosaic. Long ago, there was no refrigerator and people did not eat heavy stomach. They were waiting for the holidays to eat better. Throughout the year, they saved money to buy groceries for the holidays. The meal was then a family tradition. And traditionally in Mauritius, many families go to the beach to share a family lunch. |                                      |

| 1.5         | Short descriptionOriginally from India it marks the harvest time. However, it comes up in mythological explanations as well. This festival is also known as ‘phagwa’ which derives its name from the word ‘phaag’ implying colours. On the eve of this festival there is the ‘Holika Dahan.’ Here they burn an effigy of Holika- a Goddess in Hindu Mythology- made of bamboo and straw adorned with a saree. Songs called the Chowtaal and Dhamaal are sung and people play with colours. It is moment of joy and sharing and a way to forget all rivalry or enmity. Formerly Chawtaal and Dhamaal were sung one month before the festival so as to enter in the mood. Several Chawtaal and Dhamaal singing competitions are organised at national and regional levels. |                  |

| 1.5                      | Short descriptionDeepavali is among the most important, spectacular, attractive, popular and colourful festivals widely celebrated in Mauritius. Divali also known as Deepavali is the festival of lights and sharing. Deep means light and avalī means row. Thus Deepavali refers to a row of lights. It is related with the Hindu mythology and there are several reasons to celebrate it. Here most Mauritians celebrate it. Several types of cakes are cooked on this occasion but the special cake for that day is the ‘gato patate’ - made of sweet potato, coconut and flour which is fried in oil. The cakes are shared with families, friends and neighbours irrespective of their community. Houses are decorated with lit soil lamps and laminating lights. Firecrackers are burnt and ‘rangoli’ are drawn at the doorsteps. Cultural shows are organised throughout the island both on the eve and on the day of the festival. |                   |

Legal hunting concerns mainly deer hunting in Mauritius. Deer were brought to Mauritius by Dutch settlers from Java and deer hunting has existed since the French period. However, this practice has evolved with time. Indeed, in the past, this activity was considered a sport and leisure related one, intended and practiced mainly by the upper class Franco-Mauritians. “Coloured” men were only brought in hunting games as helpers. The rare “coloured” people who used to be invited to join a hunting party were required to have a gun and to know the owner of the “sase” (hunting ground). In 1828, there were 827 registered hunters, among which there was only one “coloured” person. With time, access to hunting games democratised and opened up. Still, in the modern day, this sport is carried out mostly by Franco-Mauritians as it remains a tradition amongst them and also because they are the main owners of hunting grounds. In addition, deer hunting was practiced only by men whereas in modern times, a large number of women do participate in this activity. Before 1960, deer were not reared in fenced hunting grounds like they are today. These were free to move in the natural environment and even approached residential areas to eat crops. This was a good occasion for the local people to hunt the animals. However, between the 1950s and 1960s, big land owners changed their land use policies from cultivation to that of “sase” (hunting grounds) for economic reasons. Consequently, many people living in camps on big estates had to leave and to settle on State lands when those camps were transformed into hunting grounds closed by fencings. In the 1960s, the “sase” was a family business supervised and managed by family members. Deer were reared for local consumption as well as for exportation hence bringing in profits for the owners. However, this has changed with time. Now, deer hunting grounds are administered by shareholders and in order to participate in hunting games one must become a shareholder. The reason for this change in administration is found in the high cost involved in maintaining the “sase”. The hunting season holds great significance in society. Hunting games used to have a structured organisation with its own hierarchy and rules. Amongst the hunters two main status were differentiated: the hunter himself and the “tifizi” or “piker fizi” (whipper-in) who are helpers of the hunter, usually a man owning a gun of lower social class, who remains on his guard and assures the surveillance position. Other workers involved in hunting games were generally boys of the neighbouring villages and camps aged between ten and fifteen years. They had to arrive at the hunting ground very early in the morning, before sunrise and were not paid with money, but were offered flesh of the deer which was shared between hunters and workers at the end of the day. This piece of meat ensured food for these poorest families. These workers were hired as either “tourner”/”tchoula” (beaters), “depeser”/”kouper” (skinning/ cutter-up) or “krokmor” (undertakers). The “tourner”/”tchoula” (beaters) used a hound on a leash and walk at a distance of ten to twenty metres from each other in the woods, screaming “tchoule” to make |                                          |

When the beaters would spot deer, they would scream “large” (release) and they would release the hound that would track the deer and bring it out of the woods in a “brize” (a clear portion of wood) so that the hunter can shoot the game easily from the watch tower, situated at the extremity of the “brize”. Before the hunting games began, the owner of the hunting ground would inform the participants about the number of deer to be killed and the kind of deer which are targeted, such as “big horns”, bucks, does, “small horns”, or fawn and young deer also known as “kornison”. After the hunting journey, the “krokmor” (undertaker) picks up the deers and bring them to a hut known as a “rondavel” where they are cut by the “depeser”/”kouper” (skinning/ cutter). The pieces of meat are then distributed amongst the hunters and helpers who participated in the hunting game. Generally, the upper class hunters and the owner of the hunting ground got the best pieces of meat namely the filet; the whipper-in got the shoulder, a thigh part or one to three pounds of venison. The beaters and the “krokmor” used to receive a shoulder, two ribs, or the neck. And the cutter-up was offered only small pieces of meat. The horns of the hunted animal were usually offered to the hunter who shot the deer and was considered like a trophy. Another kind of deer hunting is known as stalking. This involves a lonely hunter walking throughout the hunting ground with his gun, and shooting deer which met on his way. Poaching According to traditional subsistence methods in the past, Mauritians used to hunt wild animals for meat consumption. These hunting practices are now considered as illegal hunting. Indeed, in the past mountains and forests provided plenty of space to hunt. These landscapes were free to access and hunting practices were not forbidden. However with time, land use regulations, economic activities and access to private lands were all subject to change. These mutations occurring around the 1960’s had consequences on the wild environment, as well as on the use of natural environment for subsistence and hunting. Sugar cane fields were planted, woods were cut for urban development and fenced “sase” was created. Consequently these hunting practices of subsistence became illegal ones and wild animals became rare. However, these practices were perpetuated; the hunting practices and skills locally known as “al mayie” (to catch) continued to be transmitted through generations and became risky due to its illegal aspects. Deer poaching on hunting ground is to be differentiated from hunting of other wild animals. Poaching was, and is still a big dilemma for owners of hunting grounds. This illegal hunting is carried out by groups of young men who enter the “sase” illegally at night, away from the sight of the keeper. Techniques and tools used by poachers to hunt deer are different from those used by legal hunters. When planning their techniques to capture animals, the poacher would make sure that the method used would not make any noise which could cause suspicion. This technique was obtained from experience and by watching elders. They would fix the traps very early in the morning and at night they would enter the game. These traps are dangerous for the beaters as the latter were badly injured when they were caught in these traps. Other wild animals hunted are mainly monkeys, wild boar, hare, birds and “tang” (tenrec). Different methods were used to poach these animals such as guns, dogs, or traps. Dogs were used to catch monkeys, hare, wild boar and tenrec. Tenrec and hare hunting were held at night during the Easter season, while monkeys and wild boar hunting were held during the day. Different types of traps were used for deer, wild boar, tenrec, hare, and monkeys. The poachers were experts in the building of traps, and had specific knowledge of materials needed such as the wood to be used, the type of thread and how to tie knots. They also knew the best hunting seasons for each animal. For example, the hunting season for tenrec and wild |

|  | boar corresponded to the season of cattley guava, between May and June when the animals gained weight. For this reason, these animals are traditionally eaten for Easter festival by Christians. Another hunting activity is known as “lasas loulou” (loulou hunting). A “loulou” is a kind of brown crab living in the muddy coastal areas. It is now considered as an endangered species. The hunting season is from January to February. It was practiced at night, in pairs, traditionally with flambeau, later replaced by an electric torch, to attract the crab from its hole. While one person held the lighting source, the other person would capture the crab when it came out of its hole and would put it in a gunny bag. “Lasas zozo” (bird hunting) is another kind of poaching practice. Bird hunting was generally done with a slingshot. It is popularly referred to as a game practiced by children in the past. However, it is also known to be an occupation on the plantations aimed at protecting the fruit or vegetable harvest from birds. Hunting of fructivorous bats was and is still practised despite being a protected species. Use of tools and techniques Trap (traps): Different kind of traps is used to capture different animals. Traps were most common device to capture monkeys and wild boars. Cage traps were made with strips of cattley guava wood, with a bait to attract the animal and when the latter entered the cage, the door shut automatically. There was an angle lock to prevent the animal from escaping. Fruits such as cattley guavas, bananas and even sugar cane were used as baits. The cage was then covered up to be hidden. With this method, the animal was usually caught alive. However when capturing monkeys a rock called “lasomwar” (stunner) was placed in the cage to make the animal unconscious. Lak (snare): This device is used to trap deer, hare, tenrec and wild boar. A lure was placed at the centre of the snare and when the animal ate the bait it triggers a mechanism which trapped the snare around the animal. The snare was camouflaged with leaves. The snare traps were especially dangerous for people walking in the wood as those could be caught in it. Slingshot or catapult: This device is a small hand-powered projectile weapon. It depends on strong elastic materials. It forms a form the "Y" shaped handle, with rubber strips sliced from items. Rocks and grains were used as projectiles with the slingshot. It was both a hunting weapon and at the same time it is a toy which most boys played with. Slingshots were popularly used for hunting monkeys and birds. Rodrigues: Rodriguans used to live a semi-sustainable life style. The tradition of small-scale farming and agriculture has been transmitted across generations. Almost all inhabitants have a plot of land for farming and agriculture. People had a small garden in their yard and a large plot of land near their house for food production on a small-scale. The local name for their garden is bitasyon (it a derivative of habitation). Their food production was primarily for personal consumption and the surplus was either bartered or sold locally. However, some also exported their production to Mauritius but intensive agriculture did not develop on the island. The products that were exported to Mauritius were mostly: onion and garlic. Rodriguans were taught to treat nature with respect as, for them land is ‘gold’ and thus later fode pas zame ou maltret li (You should never ill-treat your land). Rituals and beliefs were transmitted relating to agriculture, gardening and even ways of cooking food. For example: intensive agriculture for exportation was not introduced on the island and therefore, they did |

Fishing was traditionally practiced both in a formal and informal way. Knowledge and skills of traditional fishing used to be transmitted through generation and the occupation to be perpetuated amongst family members. However, with the increase of the local population, the destructive fishing methods, and with the development of fishing industry, there has been a decrease in the number of fishes in and out of lagoons. Furthermore, with pollution and bad practices, coral reefs are dying and do not anymore provides food and shelters to lagoon fishes. Last decades, some legal and environmental measures to ameliorate the practices of the fishing industry were taken. Laws to regulate fishing practices, the size of the fishes caught and prices on the market were improved. Fishermen used to own a traditional boat called “pirog” or to rent it from a “banian” (banyan) who is a fish trader whotake the catch with fishermen to sell it and employ the fishermen. Fishermen owning a boat could sell the catch of the day to a ‘banian’ or have it sold by him. Traditional fishermen fish every day, except when the weather prevents it. They start fishing early in the morning, between four and seven o’clock and end at around two o’clock in the afternoon. Traditional fishing techniques are actually disappearing and have given way to industrial and commercial fishing techniques such as long-line fishing, big game fishing, or trawling. Modern tools made of artificial materials more resistant were also developed. Only a handful of young generation’s fishermen are willing to continue the traditional fishing activity. Traditional fishing techniques There are different types of fishing techniques according to the fishermen. Traditional Mauritian fishing techniques are: “Pes a la senn” (net fishing): This type of fishing is practiced in some parts of the island during the period of March to September. It consists of using a “senn” (net) which is a large fishing net that hangs vertically in the water and which needs to be held by four or five boats. Weights are attached to the bottom edge of the net so that it stays flat like a fence. In order to attract the fishes in the net, the fishermen beat the water with a stick. This action is called “bataz”. Net fishing is practiced in the lagoon and is a very destructive technique. “Pes a la golet” (angling): This fishing technique is the most common one. It consists of a long piece of thread fixed to a “golet” (fishing rod) made of bamboo with a bait attached at the end on the line. The fishing environment and the weight of the fishes determined the length and strength of the line, as well as the size of hook. “Pes o kazie” (trap fishing): This is another common fishing technique practiced by most fishermen. This is a very old way of catching fish but which has changed with time. Traditionally the trap was made with strips of bamboo and was smaller in size than the one used actually made with galvanized wires. The shape of the fish hoat also varies. | traps which are round known as “kazie ron” (round traps) or “kazie barik” which are used to catch bluespine unicorn fish also known as “pwason korn” in Mauritius. Round fishing hoats are more recent but not commonly found. The most commonly and oldest hoats used are known as “kazie plat” (flat hoat) which is used to catch smaller fishes like “rouze” (sidespot goatfish), “kapitenn” (spangled emperor), or “kato” (blue-barred parrotfish). Other types of traps are the “kazie san ke” (trap without tails), “kazie demi ron” (semi-circular trap), “kazie an ker” (heart-shaped trap), and a T shaped trap. Traditional knowledge and skills to make traps were transmitted orally and are disappearing heritage. River fishing: Mauritian also use to fish in the rivers and ponds. Traditionally women who went at the river to wash laundry used to catch small fishes and shrimps with their clothes, mainly their saree. It was also a game for children to catch small colored fishes in the rivers Use of traditional fishing tools Nowadays, most fishermen buy readymade fishing tools made with artificial objects such as nylon and polyethylene. However, traditional fishermen used to go in the woods to find the raw materials in order to make fishing tools such as oars, paddles, “kobo”, buoy, hoats, etc. Some of the traditional fishing tools are: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>– Kobo: A coconut cut in half and used to remove water that has invaded the hull, and which could cause the boats to sink.</li> <li>– Boy (buoy): A leash tied to a bamboo stick and to the nets which was used as buoy to locate the fishing nets in the sea.</li> <li>– Paddle: A small wooden oar used for pushing against the water. It consists of a handle at one end and of a blade at the other end. It was traditionally made with a light wood, such as tecoma or “tatamaka” (Calophyllum inophyllum) to have a better floating.</li> <li>– Fwinn (harpoon): A long stick with a piece of metal with two hooks at the end was used for example to fish on the reefs and to fish octopus.</li> <li>– Grif: A long stick with a curved fork at the end used to collect algae used as bait in the hoats.</li> <li>– Lagaf (gaff): A long stick with a sharp hooked piece of metal at the end used to place the stones inside the hoat.</li> <li>– Tate “(sound out): A long stick used to sound out in crabs hole to know if there is something to catch.</li> <li>– Gal: Long wooden stick usually filao or bamboo used to push the boat [from French: gaule].</li> </ul> Use of “Pirog” Traditionally, fishermen use to navigate on traditional embarkations known as “pirog” (pirogue) or “pirog lavwal” (sailing pirogue). These boats pointed at the front and flat at the rear, were made primarily with wood (mainly jackfruit tree or “bwa nwar” (Albizia lebeck) which are rotten woods). These were then painted in black with tar. Later on the whole structure was made of steel or iron wire and gradually steel boats replaced wooden boats. In the mid 20th century, aluminium boats became popular and later glass-reinforced plastic, more commonly known as fibreglass which gained popularity. The popularity of fibreglass has spelt the death of wooden boats, and of the marine carpenters crafts associated. Traditional pirogues, had sails made with a type of canvas known as “latwal ekri”(raw linen). The fishermen cut the panels of the sail which were then sewn together by the dressmakers to give to the sail its ‘airfoil shape’. To cut the panels, the fishermen laid the cloth flat on the floor with the help of pegs to fix the extremities. The curved surface of the sails traps the air |

In Mahébourg the boats had to be built with a longer keel to face the rough sea. On the other hand, in Grand Baie, where the sea is flat and not deep, boats are larger allowing more fishermen to come in to go fishing farer. Another kinds of traditional boat differentiated from fishing boats is called "bato ponte". Those boats were the property of wealthier people. Those were made of jackfruit tree lined with cattley guava wood which is reputed to be a strong wood. In Rodrigues, fishing is one of the two pillars of the local economy. People went fishing for their personal consumption but fish was also exported to Mauritius. The development of the fishing industry constitutes an inherent component of the historical development of the island since its development with the first settlements on the island. | 1.5                          | Short description Traditional use of nature for subsistence implies the fruit gathering in nature such as tamarind fruits, mangoes, papaya, litchi, longan or cattley guava (“goyave de Chine”). Mauritian used to live close to their natural environment; they knew the fruit seasons and medicinal properties of local plants. It also includes the gathering of wild vegetables such as “fey sonz” (Colocasia antiquorum) growing near the rivers. This practice is still alive but it is disappearing with privatisation of lands and urbanisation. Fruits gathering is actually mainly done in private space of the court yard where Mauritians use to grow fruit trees. However the practice of gathering guava is well anchored in Mauritian tradition and is the occasion for family picnics and gatherings during its ripening season, between April and May. |                                          |

People living in camps and villages used to do “zardin” (garden) on a rented plot of land owned by big land owners of the area, who were also often their employer. They grew crops such as maize, cassava, chilli, pumpkin, egg-plants, bananas, green leaves, tomatoes and sweet potatoes on this land. They had to pay the rental in exchange of a part of their production. While some cultivated for self-consumption, others cultivated in order to sell their production or to barter with fishermen or hunters of the area. The Mauritian landscape was then covered with numerous gardens which allowed some camps to be almost self-sufficient. Small planters used to farm on a family basis involving the participation of all generations, children helping their parents after school hours. The occupation did not consist only in planting activities (sowing, watering and harvesting). Gardeners had also to chase animals away from plantations by installing hare traps or using slingshot. Some used dogs to chase the monkeys away and others even slept on their plantations. Some informants constructed straw sheds (“langer”) in their gardens to stay at night and had a gun with them to keep the monkeys away from the banana trees. However, in the years 1960’s, with the land use mutations and socio economic landscape changes, camps settlers were removed to State land and did not have access anymore to lands for gardening. These traditional agricultural practices and skills are disappearing with the lifestyle that accompanied them. Use of traditional gardening tools <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>– Lars (axe): a hand-held cutting tool with of an axe head made of copper and a wooden haft. It was used to cut wood.</li> <li>– Sabr (sword): a hand-held cutting tool with of a single-edge blade and a wooden handle. It was used to cut small woody plants.</li> <li>– Fosi(sickle): a hand-held cutting tool with a curved blade and a wooden handle. The inside of the curve is sharp and the blade is cranked at the end. It was used to harvest grain crops and to weed.</li> <li>– Pios(pickaxe): a hand-held digging tool with a hard wooden handle and at the end a metal head fixed perpendicular to the handle. It was used to dig especially rocky grounds.</li> <li>– Serp(billhook): a cutting tool consisting of a single-bevelled and convex cutting blade fixed to a wooden handle. It was used to cut small plants.</li> <li>– Grat: this is a kind of billhook made of iron sheet with a wooden handle. It was used to cut sugar cane, herbs, and also to collect it.</li> </ul> Maize cultivation |                                                                              |

|  | Since the 18th and 19th centuries, maize has been grown all over Mauritius to feed people. In the 20th century, maize cultivation declined and was confined to Black River, Grand Port and Flacq. However, there was a revival during the Second World War since there was no rice being shipped to Mauritius. People started feeding themselves with maize and later in the 1950s, maize again became a staple food for many inhabitants of Mauritius. The maize was traditionally planted in family gardens at a small scale production for self-consumption mainly. It was threshed with a hand tool called “taray” consisting in a long wooden stick with a broad flat edge like a spatula. This activity was traditionally done by the men in the court yard whilst the women carried the grains. After threshing the grains, the seeds were separated from the “koton may”(seed coat), the kernel and the straw. Then, the maize was kept in a shed and left to dry until a merchant came to buy it. Part of the harvest was kept for personal consumption. The seeds were ground in a hand maize mill (“moulin may”). This mill was a typical feature of many homes in Mauritius in the past. It was a stone mill, made by a stone cutter or a mason. It consisted of two rocks superimposed with a hole in the centre. The hole was filled in with seeds and with the help of a stick the upper rock was rotated to crush the seeds. The rock at the bottom did not rotate. A gunny bag was placed under the mill to collect the flour which came out through the slit between the two rocks. A portion of maize was crushed for the week as maize flour was staple food for many people. In some areas, in a context of more extensive maize culture, farmers used to thresh their harvest at the mechanic maize thresher. They carried their harvest in bundles to the maize thresher. The maize was immersed in water and then was mechanically threshed. Until the 1960s, maize was one of the main cash crops; it was one of the staple foods. In some regions, the maize produced was sent to Port Louis by coastal boats. Sugar cane cultivation Sugar cane plantation was and is still one of the economic pillars of Mauritius. Sugar cane was introduced since early settlement, under Dutch rules in the 17th century. However, that time it wasn’t cultivated extensively for sugar industry, it was only planted to produce a drink called “arrack”. During 18th and 19th century, sugar cane industry developed, sugar cane plantations became extensive and sugar estates flourished. Sugar cane plantation is a Mauritian cultural heritage at the heart of the settlement in the island and development of Mauritian society. Indeed the need of workers in sugar estates brought hundreds of thousand people from Africa and Asia on the island. First as slaves were brought and after abolition of slavery in 1835 another source of labourer was brought under the indenture labourer status. The island was divided under big sugar estate. However, small planter class developed during British rule. Oral history reveals the main importance of that sector in the Mauritian heritage and the practices bound to that domain. Before mechanisation of work, sugar cane was traditionally planted manually. It was a hard work starting with the removal of stones from the field, then digging of the soil to plant sugar cane and applying manure on fields. For harvest, labourer used to remove the straw (“depaye”) and then cut the cane before bringing it to the factory manually or with oxen carts. Labourers used to work under the supervision of a “sirdar” a ‘coloured’ person employed as foreman on the plantation. His job consisted mainly on supervising the laborers and paying them. He could speak English or French and acted as an intermediary between the property owner and the labourers. Tools used in sugar cane plantations are mainly the sickle; used to cut the cane, “lapins sipay” or “lapins makabe”, a long iron stick pointed at one end and larger at the other end to be able to cut straw, herbs and to remove stones to dig lines in the soil before planting cane. A tools known as “baraminn” consisting in a long pointed stick was used to dig a hole in the stones to insert dynamite to remove stones. |

|     | Tea cultivationThe Small Holding Project, a most significant development, was implemented in the context of the tea-growing and developed small holdings scheme to diversify agricultural activity away from sugar in 1959. Large areas of forest land were cleared and tea was planted in the Midlands valley. Former labourers, engaged in the cultivation of tea plots, worked for the Tea Division of the Ministry of Agriculture. Unfortunately, the fall in the price of tea on the world market rendered tea cultivation uneconomical and plots of land under tea were reconverted into the plantations of sugar cane and other crops. During the process of centralisation, at the end of the 19th century and at the beginning of 20th century, sugar mills closed down. Many labourers, who lost their jobs, had to move to another mill. Some were relocated and started tobacco and tea cultivation. Pineapple cultivationPineapple plantation developed in the 19th century in Mauritius. However, in 1904 many small planters faced severe transportation problems due to a lack of carts. So, many planters started planting pineapples. Pineapple is planted on a wide scale at Chamarel and this is used mainly for selling purposes. Coffee cultivationCoffee was grown in Mauritius but as it was Réunion Island that had the monopoly of growing it but this production diminished considerably over the years between 1816 and 1830. Most coffee was grown in the Chamarel region. Apart from commercial production, people also used to grow coffee plants in their garden for personal consumption. Some inhabitants had coffee plants and they prepare coffee themselves for their daily personal consumption. Traditionally, the coffee berries are picked when red, the flesh of the berry is removed and the seeds are dried in the sun and a thin layer is removed when dried. Then the coffee beans are roasted with sugar in a cooking pot until they are caramelised. Afterwards, they are left to dry on a piece of oily cloth in the sun till the beans harden and when hard they are crushed using a “pilon”(mortar) until they are reduced to powder. The coffee powder was usually kept in a hermetic tin container. To prepare coffee beverage, drip brew or filtered coffee, people poured two coffee spoon of grounded coffee in a “grek”(coffee filter made with cotton cloth which looks like a sock) then they poured boiling water over the coffee. The coffee-grounds remained in the filter. |      |

| 1.5                                          | Short description Traditionally, Mauritians used to rear swine, sheep, goats, pigs, oxen and most importantly poultry in their courtyard. This is known as sustainable farming. There were both subsistence farmers, who reared these animals for self-consumption and large scale farming, mainly in big estates, which reared more extensively oxen in order to sell them and make a living out of it. Many Mauritians of Indian origin used to rear cows and oxen in order to sell them since their religious philosophy does not allow them to consume its meat. They used to make ghee (clarified butter) with boiled cow milk. Moreover, every part of the cow was used, such as cow-dung which was used to plaster the walls and soil of traditional straw houses. Cow milk was also sold by the farmer or by specialised merchant who used to sell fresh cow milk on their bicycle in a big bin. Farmers who bred pigs made sausages called “boudin” considered as a delicacy. Goats were sold to butchers and the skin of goats were used to make the traditional music instrument called “ravan”. Ducks were also bred as well as hares. Subsistence farming has allowed many people to meet their basic needs and earn their life. In the past, as there were no refrigeration methods to conserve meat, animals were killed only on demand. |                                                          |
